Leave the Bikers Alone!

Editor:

In regard to the article "Shot Up and Shut Down" (April 7), I find it to be offensive to the motorcycling community that you chose to put a motorcycle on the cover of your latest issue. In doing so you show the bias that motorcyclists have had to endure for years. Also, it adds to the general misconception that all motorcyclists are irresponsible and trouble makers.

Why did you not put a gun on the cover? The article says how shooting and dumping are the major problems, so why did you write a story that doesn't even say the word motorcycle? I find it hard to shoot a gun while riding my motorcycle. As a rider that cares what the public image of myself conveys as I ride responsibly, I take great offense at the motorcycle on the cover (the wrong kind for riding in that area, it is a flat track style of motorcycle meant to be raced on a track).

If there was a designated riding area in Humboldt County this would alleviate some of the problem. There are funds collected from motorcycle registrations that set up riding areas that are controlled and supervised and could be used to recreate on two and four wheels. Also, as to the problem of shooting which I found to be alarming, when I last rode down to the river bar, a rifle range that could be supervised might be an idea worth looking into and add to encouraging safe shooting practices.

It's Not Your Fault

Editor:

I just wanted to add some comments related to John Griffin's interesting letter last week about guilt, insanity and the brain ("Mailbox," April 7).

Neuroscientist Benjamin Libet discovered that it takes about half a second for your brain to generate a conscious thought. By the time you experience a thought it's already been in the pipeline for half a second. This finding upset a lot of people, Libet included, and it's said to be the most referenced discovery in the field.

It's upsetting because it means we have no control over our own thoughts. Whatever you're thinking right now was built up over the last half second by your inner robot, that 100 billion-cell biological wonder-machine sitting between your ears. Your consciousness is the end result of that half-second-long process and the robot that built it is, well, just that, a robot. It cranks out motions, emotions and thoughts all day long and does so down there on the molecular level, far below any conscious activity.

It's not just a question of whether or not the insane person is in control of his thoughts and actions. Now, post Libet, it's a question of whether or not any of us are. And apparently, according to the science anyway, we're not.

This is a bit of a downer, I know, but before you start getting too depressed about it, let me add that there's a plus side to the story; a couple of pluses in fact: a) you don't have to ever again feel guilty about anything you think or do, and b) you don't have to hate anybody else for doing what they do. It's not their fault that they're so awful. We can all blame it on our inner robots.

So ease up folks, don't be so hard on the miscreants or yourselves. Nobody's in control here. That's the bottom line and from this perspective it's not so surprising that the world is so thoroughly screwed up.

Seaworthy a Worthy Goal

Editor:

The well-researched article "That Sinking Feeling" (March 24) cites a number of issues regarding past and future sinkers, vessels which are derelict by nature of their age, construction and lack of active maintenance. Most of those cited are biodegradable, wood or steel. Irrespective, the vessel's owners must be held responsible when a hull's death occurs, as surely they will.

While the harbor does not require insurance, it also does not require a bond ensuring the owners will reimburse the harbor for any loss, physical, personal and environmental. If you're a responsible boat owner, you'd likely choose not to dock your boat next to an uninsurable boat. And the statement that harbor authorities don't want to "tick-off" boat owners is beyond astounding. Would that the CHP felt the same way about my driving habits!

The article mentions the term "seaworthy" but not in the context of actual "seaworthiness." A boat found by the U.S. Coast Guard inspector to be without lifejackets and fire extinguishers is not necessarily unseaworthy, but it is unsafe. More than once the article notes a vessel is afloat and is therefore seaworthy. The ability to float is only one measure of seaworthiness. A maritime attorney in court can give one who asserts the term an in-service on the meaning. Most marine surveyors of my acquaintance would not use that term in a report, no matter how well-equipped and maintained the vessel was. It can be fit for sea and service, but unless manned by a competent captain and crew, it will not be "seaworthy."

It's time the harbor get serious about preventing environmental damage by holding owners responsible for their derelict boats before major damage to the bay occurs.

Rising insurance costs threaten public access to county parks

By Grant Scott-Goforth
grant@northcoastjournal.com

An outpouring of support for Humboldt’s County’s parks seems likely to stave off any of the drastic changes to the system proposed as the department faces major budget shortfalls for the next several years.

Community concern reached a peak late last month, when Public Works Director Tom Mattson presented a report to the board of supervisors outlining the financial woes of county Parks and Trails (a division of Public Works). Mattson was requesting to transfer $18,000 from parks-held trusts into the department’s budget to cover the remainder of the fiscal year, which the supervisors granted.

But his report outlined growing concerns over the parks’ ability to stay solvent in the future, and identified potential solutions: including the establishment of fees at currently free county parks, the removal of services and even the sale of several parks.

The parks department’s biggest challenge comes from a massive increase in insurance costs, the result of a crash that killed a man in February 2013, when an on-duty parks employee struck cyclist John Mello on U.S. Highway 101. The county eventually settled a claim with Mello’s family for $1.6 million.

As a result, the county’s insurance premiums spiked, and the county allocated those costs to the agency responsible: the parks department. The department’s insurance bill went up nearly 15 fold, from $6,000 for the 2013-2014 fiscal year to $92,000 for the current fiscal year. Including this year’s $50,000 increase, that comes to $250,000 over five years before the insurance costs may go back down. The county already mandates driver safety training for employees, Mattson said, and there’s little it can do to mitigate the insurance costs. “Things like this really drive home the safety efforts that everyone has to make in all our divisions,” Mattson said in a recent interview.

“Unfortunately the parks [department] has always been operated on a shoestring,” he said, adding that the county has been deferring maintenance at parks for years. The massive insurance increase was enough to send his department scrambling for cost-saving and revenue-generating measures, he said, but it was only the “tip of the iceberg” of funding shortfalls.

Mattson’s supplemental budget will get the department through the June 30 end of the fiscal year, but the Parks Department’s trust funds are all but empty.

So Mattson started looking for solutions. The parks department has already saved money by turning to volunteers and inmates enrolled in the Sheriff’s Work Alternative Program to reduce maintenance costs, discontinued operating the Luffenholtz beach access and turning to in-house fire ring construction.

Mattson proposed several measures for the upcoming fiscal year, including discontinuing the temporary dam that creates a swimming hole at Freshwater Park, charging day-use fees at Mad River and Clam beaches, and selling some of the county's properties, including the beloved A.W. Way campground in Petrolia.

The county doesn't have a quick way to tally attendance at those parks, Mattson said, but the identification of those as cost saving measures doesn't mean they aren't popular. It's just that the operation of those particular parks is expensive; the permitting of the dam, the cost of having a ranger, the help needed to collect fees, they all add up. In fact, only two of the county's 15 parks generate enough revenue to cover their upkeep.

Perhaps unsurprisingly, the proposed measures were met unfavorably.

A prompt for comments related to the parks budget issue on the county's online "Open Humboldt" board got more than 300 responses, a big turnout for the comment space.

Of those respondents, 88 percent said they considered county parks "extremely important." More than 90 percent said providing general funds for the county parks was an "extremely important" or "very important" use of the money, and expressed a desire to keep the parks free or affordable. Seventy-seven percent said not to consider day-use fees at parks that don't currently charge for that use.

Humboldt Surfrider led a campaign encouraging people to weigh in on the issue, and Humboldt Chapter Chair Delia Bense-Kang wrote a letter to the board of supervisors opposing the sale of public properties and the increase or installation of day-use fees.

"Imposing fees on the county's most popular beaches would reduce or eliminate the ability of many of Humboldt County residents to enjoy them," Bense-Kang wrote. (Indeed, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, 21 percent of Humboldt County residents live in poverty.) "Selling or relinquishing coastal and near-coast campgrounds and parks would consequently diminish opportunities to enjoy some of California's best coastal areas for visitors and locals alike."

In fact, a similar issue is playing out in Sonoma County. The California Coastal Commission will decide this week whether or not to allow the state to impose fees at state-owned public beaches, a measure that access advocates like Surfrider oppose. Even North Coast Sen. Mike McGuire weighed in on the issue in Sonoma, urging the Coastal Commission — which is partially tasked with protecting the coastline for the enjoyment of the public — to nix the fee proposal.

"We should be in the business of opening up our coast to all residents, no matter their socio-economic background ..." McGuire wrote. "Rather than taking a piecemeal approach, which this plan is, we should be introducing a statewide funding proposal that would eliminate the need for any beach fees to be established."

The Coastal Commission's decision could play into what Humboldt County may decide regarding day-use fees when it adopts a 2016-2017 budget in June.

The local support for Humboldt County parks appears to be strong. Along with the public response to the online poll and the Surfrider efforts, supervisors Mark Lovelace and Estelle Fennell told the Times-Standard they wouldn't support getting rid of the parks.

The real costs of maintenance — and the staggering insurance bills — have to be addressed, Mattson said. That means finding a balance — the right fees at the right places, the deferral of maintenance, cutbacks in services, or some combination thereof.

Mattson said his department doesn't want to relinquish properties or make it harder for people to access them, and he said he's had good conversations with the County Administrative Office about identifying funding sources to offset the deficit keep all of the parks. He's glad the public has been involved. More people weighing in now means better decision-making when he takes his proposal to the supervisors in June.

Farmers Marketing

Behind cannabis branding

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Fertilizer magnates have had a presence in Humboldt County for more than a decade, but other industries ancillary to The Industry are also beginning to bud and flower. Creatives and brand managers are also carving out a niche in the open space between societal acceptance and federal endorsement, finding new and clever ways to sell a product that used to just sell itself.

In Humboldt, marketing is still in its toddlerdom. Several local co-ops have taken on the task of leveraging point-of-origin and best practices as branding tools for their farmers, weaving a story of the Emerald Triangle as the home of mom-and-pop growers and cannabis-friendly microclimates. (See “More Swag, Less Schwag,” Jan. 2016)

In the wider world, brand experts are just beginning to explore the potential of legalized weed. A versatile herb, cannabis seems to have as many consumer audiences as it has applications: recreational, medicinal and novelty are three primary targets. But if you do an image search for “cannabis branding,” you’ll find most campaigns are similar to the point of monotony: clean lines, green leaves against white backgrounds, cupped hands holding bright buds, the occasional trippy geometric design giving a nod to the chemical components behind an ideal high. Few contemporary canna-branding campaigns resemble the stoney, Mr. Natural-esque image that used to dog the industry. And this, according to at least one cannabis marketer, is by design.

“One of the things that’s really crucial is, in general, the industry is needing to elevate from that stoner stigma for mass marketing appeal,” says Jennifer Culpepper, founder of Brand Joint. “When you design a product that looks like it could go on a Whole Foods shelf, you’ve overcome that stigma.”

Brand Joint is based in Maryland, where medical marijuana is legal but no state-licensed dispensaries are operational. Like California, where many are anticipating the legalization of recreational pot, cultivators in her home state are playing a game of hurry up and wait. Much of her clientele comes from the neighboring District of Columbia and from companies in Colorado.

“In Colorado, the dispensaries understand how to brand to the target customer,” says Culpepper, who was inspired to start Brand Joint during a visit to Colorado’s Cannabis Cup. “You’ll see one of them geared toward techy millennial males; another geared toward health and healing that looks more like a yoga studio. If you know the audience you’re trying to reach, you can do a much better job at creating a brand that speaks to them.”

So does the name “Humboldt” retain cachet as a branding tool, as so many in our own green bubble insist? Culpepper is skeptical.

“I don’t know that people on the East Coast know the name Humboldt County,” she says. “I can see how there’s a really great branding opportunity for a strain or various strains ... that have a sense of history.”

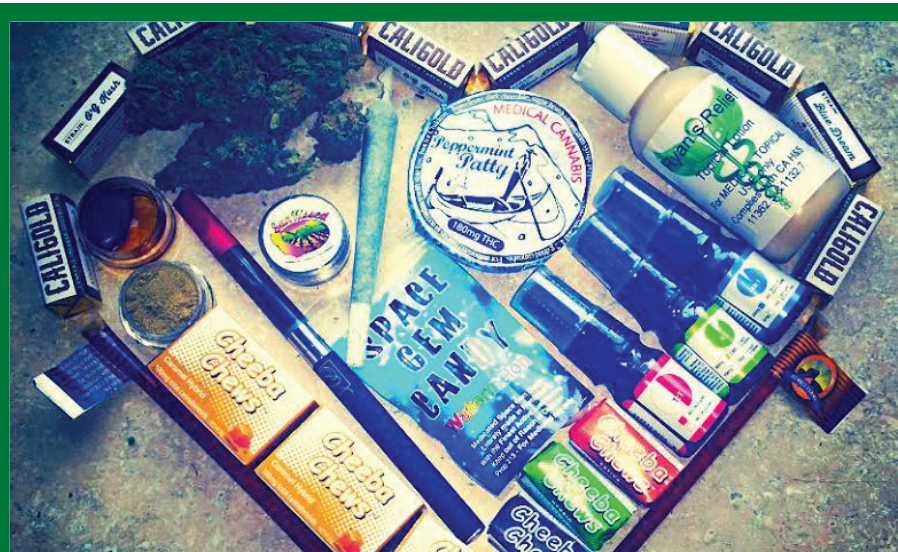

Culpepper says she has “mixed feelings” about federal legalization, which will pit the small, independent companies she currently enjoys working with against corporations. But pre-legalization branding efforts could prime consumers to prize local, authentic and ethically produced product, much in the way craft beer muscled into the commercial suds market.

The one thing Culpepper says cannabis’ customer base wants above all else? Consistency.

“It’s not always happening, particularly in edibles,” she says. Products should be clearly marked, with the exact milligrams of THC in each brownie or tincture.

Culpepper says she also finds candy-like edibles — like the gummy bears she saw for sale at the Cannabis Cup — troubling.

“I have two small kids myself. I know that if they found a pack of gummy bears in my house, they’re going to eat the whole thing in one sitting. That’s terrifying to me,” she says. “I’m not interested in designing something like that. When you make it look just like regular candy, that’s where I draw the line.”

Choosing the right medical cannabis

Can be confusing at first with so many different and unusual names and choices. That being said, it is much easier to find a medical cannabis product that will work for you once you have figured out what your desired effect is.

We are learning so much more about this wonderful plant all the time. We now know that aspects of cannabis such as the flavor, contributes to the effect. Remember, “The nose knows” — So trust your instincts and keep a personal cannabis journal to note how certain strains affect you. One very important factor in choosing the right medicine for yourself is that each strain has a limit to the amount and type of cannabinoids that can be received by your body at a certain time. This is why you gain a tolerance faster to certain strains and others seem to medicate the same way for longer. By choosing to use different strains, and different methods of ingestions, such as using edibles or vaporizing, it is easier to keep your cannabinoid receptors fresh and ready to be activated by the next type of medicine you are using. This will help you conserve your medicine and get the maximum effect from it, and it can also help to reach the desired cannabinoid balance you are looking for. Each patient has an individual reaction to each type of medicine tried, and experimentation with different types of strains and methods of use is essential for the new patient.

In very little time, you’ll be able to determine what works best for you. We are here to help you find what will work best for your needs. Please feel free to come to us with any questions or concerns. We believe in the “Heart of Humboldt” and professional and compassionate care is what you will always receive here.

Camping a Go at Koster Parking Lot

The Eureka City Council voted 3 to 2 on April 5 to allow camping in a city parking lot at Koster and Washington streets. The motion, which was a modified version of the Shelter Crisis Declaration approved by the council Jan. 19, passed after a an hour and a half of discussion, debate and public comment.

While the sanctioned camping spot is temporary, from April 11 to June 10, the city insists it is not a “temporary sanctioned camp,” the term that has been a bugaboo for the city for more than a year, since the struggle to relocate campers in the Palco Marsh began. In an email to the Journal, Sparks said he believed the area escaped that designation by not allowing people to store their belongings onsite or providing restrooms. Sparks has said he sees the area as a “relief valve” for people who have been roused from camping elsewhere in the city. Eureka will also be working with St. Vincent de Paul to create a temporary shelter using cots inside its facility.

In the city council meeting, Sparks said, “We certainly recognize that neither one of these strategies are part of the city’s ‘Housing First’ strategy.”

But under questioning from the city council, which was divided along the same lines as for the original shelter crisis vote, with Councilmembers Marion Brady and Melinda Ciarabellini dissenting, cracks in city staff’s plan began to appear.

Ciarabellini asked if the area would be policed, if there would be any oversight or any costs to the city.

Sparks replied that he saw it as a low-enforcement area like the one currently in place behind the Bayshore Mall, and that the city might incur some “minimal costs” for Porta-potties and a Dumpster, a reversal of his statement to the Journal. Pressed to quantify how much the costs might be, Sparks said he didn’t have that information, but estimated a few thousand dollars.

Brady asked where people would go during the day, as camping hours would be limited to the night. Sparks said the Rescue Mission was working on a day use area, but it wasn’t expected to be ready until the summer. Brady asked if a place “where people could hang out during the day” could be made available, to keep people from sleeping in front of neighboring businesses. She suggested the Balloon Track, where people could set up “easy chairs.”

Sparks said measures may not need to be taken as the city is still entertaining requests for proposals from nonprofits and working to get people into housing, adding that since people in the Palco Marsh area have been notified that they must leave by May 2, numbers have decreased “from 180 to 143.”

This little sea lion caused a stir when he washed ashore on the North Jetty on April 8, prompting the Marine Mammal Center to remind folks that this is baby season for our flippers friends. The center warns that if you see any marine mammal on sand, call the center at 951-4722 and refrain from touching, bothering or taking selfies with the animals. (Fear not, the pup pictured above made it safely back into the water.)

‘Until the Sun Sets’

The Klamath River’s new path toward dam removal

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Amid the steady din of sea lion barks, bird chirps and crashing surf, a host of federal, state and tribal officials gathered around a fish cleaning table at the mouth of the Klamath River last week to sign a new agreement to remove the four dams that have clogged the river for decades and to chart a new path forward for communities from the Klamath's mouth to its headwaters.

Moments earlier, North Coast Congressman Jared Huffman pulled Yurok Tribal Chair Thomas O'Rourke aside. "Gosh, this is a great day," the congressman said. O'Rourke, clad in his trademark wide-brimmed hat, responded in his customary slow drawl. "My people," he said, "don't make that judgment until the sun sets."

It was a symbolic moment on a symbolic day. O'Rourke had been at a similar event six years earlier in Salem, Oregon, and inked his name to a similar agreement that pledged to take down the dams. He'd been there as then-California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger told the gathered crowd: "By finalizing that agreement we can say, 'hasta la vista' to the dams. I can already hear the salmon fish screaming, 'I'll be back.'" And O'Rourke had stood by and watched as that agreement shriveled on the vine and expired late last year when Congress failed to pass the legislation needed to enact it.

The history of the original Klamath agreements — a trio of hard-fought compromises crafted through a decade of negotiations between Klamath basin stakeholders — was not lost on those who addressed the crowd last week. Nor was the fact that the stakeholders who crafted those original agreements had resisted the desire to retreat into their corners and retrench in their philosophical divides, but had instead returned to the negotiating table. Also not lost was the fact that many of those stakeholders, including some who addressed that crowd on the bank of the Klamath River last week, were supporting the new deal with trepidation, fearful of what it means for their own futures but respectful of what it means to their counterparts.

"This is the absolute essence of non-extremism and non-polarization," Gov. Jerry Brown said. "It's called working together the way American government should."

What held the original Klamath agreements together was the fact that each of those who negotiated them left something behind. For ranchers and farmers along the upper Klamath, that meant agreeing to dam removal and shrinking the footprints of their farms and ranches in exchange for some water security in dry years. For lower Klamath tribes and environmental groups, that meant agreeing to see some water diverted to irrigators and farmers in exchange for dam removal and habitat restoration. For the Klamath Tribes of Oregon, that meant sending some of their water to farms and cattle ranches in exchange for dam removal and additional lands for their reservations.

But the pacts signed last week — the revised Klamath Hydroelectric Settlement Agreement and the Klamath Power and Facilities Agreement — contain only a fraction of those promises. They provide for the long-sought removal of the four dams that will open hundreds of miles of salmon spawning habitat, but only promise irrigators and farmers that stakeholders will continue to work to honor the initial agreements. The pacts also include a provision that irrigators and farmers will be protected from potential regulatory and legal threats associated with reintroducing — through the dam removals — salmon and other species that for decades have been absent in the upper river.

But those promises were enough to draw support, and to bring some farmers and irrigators down to the Klamath's mouth last week. "Our future will be determined by what happens next," said Scott White, executive director of the Klamath Water Users Association, which represents irrigators in the upper Klamath. "It would have been very easy to make this all about dams, but none of you did that."

U.S. Department of the Interior Secretary Sally Jewell said that's really the heart of what might become the largest river restoration project in the history of the United States — recognizing and respecting the people and communities that depend on the river, from its headwaters to its mouth. She pledged, "on the record and for the record," to honor those initial agreements and create a plan that works for irrigators, ranchers, tribes and fish.

A palpable excitement surrounded last week's signing ceremony. It resurrected a deal many thought dead just months before. And, without being hitched to a water deal, the new pact has even brought in some critics of its original counterpart, such the Hoopa Valley Tribe and some environmentalists who felt the old deal sacrificed too much. But — despite news headlines and speakers' excited claims that the dams are coming down — a lot remains to see this enormous undertaking to fruition. Or, as O'Rourke might say, there's a lot of daylight left before the sun sets on those Klamath's dams.

In a phone interview a couple of days after the new KHSAs were signed, Craig Tucker sounded chipper. But having been involved in the dam removal effort since its inception, Tucker, now the Karuk Tribe's natural resources policy advocate, also knows enough to be cautious.

"It's not a 100 percent guaranteed thing," Tucker said, before explaining his optimism about the KHSAs' new path. The new deal, Tucker said, does not require new legislation from Congress, which has a powerful conservative block of members who are ideologically opposed to dam removal.

Instead, the revised KHSA relies on the Federal Energy Regulation Commission, which Congress has already entrusted with the oversight of dam licensing and decommissioning. Under the settlement, the tribes, the states of Oregon and California, the federal government and the dams' owner — the Berkshire Hathaway subsidiary PacifiCorp — will submit a joint proposal to FERC. The FERC filing will ask the commission to transfer the dams' licenses over to a newly formed nonprofit between the states — the Klamath River Renewal Corporation — that would then decommission and remove them.

"I think you'd be hard pressed to find a case where the dam owner, the states, the federal government and the stakeholders went to FERC with a deal and FERC said no," Tucker said of the federal five-person commission that's currently made up of four Obama appointees and a vacant seat. "I think our chances at FERC are great."

In addition to being united, Tucker said that once philosophies are taken out of the discussion, science is strongly on the side of dam removal.

Nobody understands that science better than Dennis Lynch, who's worked for the United States Geological Survey for more than 30 years, the last seven as the Klamath program manager.

A bureau of the Department of the Interior, the USGS is one of the scientific arms of the federal government. It has no oversight responsibilities, no regulatory capacities. "Our mission is 100 percent science and monitoring and data collection," Lynch said recently by phone. "People give us good questions — like, What would be the impacts of taking these dams out? — and we try to answer them."

In 2009, as the first settlement negotiations were nearing fruition in the basin, Lynch was asked to head a team of about 50 federal scientists from eight agencies looking at the science of dam removal. There were a host of key findings. Science says the dams negatively impact water quality on the river by pooling water in their reservoirs, which in turn warms with high concentrations of dissolved oxygen, providing a breeding ground for toxic algal blooms. The studies also suggest that while removing the four dams won't have much of an impact on the amount of water coming down the river — the dams are designed to generate electricity, not store water — they should leave the river flowing with cleaner, colder water and open up some 400 miles of salmon and steelhead spawning habitat.

Lynch's team also found that the dams are only currently producing about half the energy they were designed to. Additionally, the environmental improvements needed to relicense them — the dams were built decades ago before many environmental laws were put into place — would reduce their power generation by another 25 percent. (That, coupled with the cost of those environmental improvements, is why PacifiCorp has agreed to surrender them for removal, according to company spokesman Bob Gravely.)

Further, Lynch said, when scientists took samples from the estimated 15 million cubic yards of sediment that has built up behind those dams over the decades, they didn't find any concerning levels of heavy metals or chemicals — things like DDT, mercury and dioxin — that would make dam removal hazardous.

In short, the science says dam removal would result in a healthier river with a fairly minimal impact to the power grid.

But — science or no — there are plenty of people convinced dam removal is a terrible idea, the work of "environmental extremists," as Congressman Doug LaMalfa said. Siskiyou County in California and Klamath County in Oregon remain opposed to the deal, and the Klamath Irrigation District, a subsidiary of the Klamath Water Users Association, has already threatened litigation, arguing that it was cut out of the "privately negotiated" new KHSA.

Tucker said he expects lawsuits to be filed. “With (the National Environmental Policy Act) and all these environmental laws, there’s a lot of room for litigation,” he said. “You can always allege someone broke the law. But that’s why we’ve gone so far above and beyond what’s required by law to show the scientific case for dam removal. We look forward to defending this in court because we think we’ve got the science.”

Since the signing day in Requa, things have been moving fast. The newly formed Klamath River Renewal Corporation has already incorporated and is now working on selecting a board of directors. Lynch’s team — after largely dispersing for the last few years to other tasks — is busily working on an update to its 2012 Environmental Impact Statement, a “couple hundred-page document to help (FERC) use and understand the work we’ve done previously,” Lynch said.

Looking back on the original Klamath agreements, Tucker’s biggest regret is that stakeholders didn’t push for congressional action right after they were signed in February of 2010. Instead, they paused to catch their breath and wait for the election year to pass. In the eyes of Tucker and others, it was a fatal mistake, as the Tea Party rose to prominence that November, shifting the political climate in Washington and making dam removal a political lightning rod.

This time, with a presidential election looming, Tucker said the plan is to have the joint proposal submitted to FERC by July 1, enough time to allow for a decision by November. While this thing is supposed to have moved outside the political realm by going into the FERC process, there’s always the chance that a new president will appoint new cabinet members with different priorities and the new KHSA — staunchly supported by the current Department of Interior leadership — could get shelved. After all, political winds can shift quickly.

If the KHSA gets the nod of approval from FERC, the new nonprofit corporation will then have to get the federal, state and local permits required to facilitate the largest dam removal project in the nation’s history. It’s enough to make anyone who’s ever applied for a building permit sweat.

“That’s a big one,” Lynch said. “FERC won’t issue a final order until all permits are in place.”

That will require permits declaring the project is in compliance with the National Historic Preservation Act, the Clean Water Act and the Coastal Zone Management Act. It will need a wetland delineation from the Army Corps of Engineers and memorandums of agreements with tribes and states. It will also need a host of local permits from counties along the river (including the two staunchly opposed to dam removal) for everything from accessing and using county roads to construction and deconstruction activities.

Somewhere along the way — nobody contacted by the Journal for this story seemed to know exactly when and how — a total of $450 million in funding for dam removal will have to be transferred to the new corporation. About $200 million of that is coming from a surcharge paid by PacifiCorp customers that is being held in an account by the Public Utilities Commission. The other $250 million is from a California water bond and was included in this year’s state budget, but it’s unclear exactly what the process is to transfer those funds to the new nonprofit and whether it would require an act of the state Legislature.

Once the nonprofit has all permits and funding in hand, it would return to FERC seeking a final license transfer and decommissioning order.

“FERC will require that the plan to do this is something that they can accept,” PacifiCorp spokesman Bob Gravely said. “Certainly, they’ve approved other dam removals but the plan and the financing and the risk mitigation are going to have to pass muster with FERC, and all of that still has to happen.”

With a permitted, funded project and a final order from FERC, all that’s left is to successfully execute the removal of a combined 425 vertical feet of dams in a single year, 2020.

Because there’s an estimated 15 million cubic yards of sediment built up behind the four dams, Lynch said models indicate the best course to minimize impacts on fisheries is to take them all out at once. As a part of removal, most of that sediment — about 85 percent of which is fine silt and clay — will be released into the river. There's no question that will have a negative impact on fish.

"The sediment concentration will be high enough to damage fish, high enough to be lethal to some fish," Lynch said. But salmon have three-year lifecycles and only one cohort is in the river at any given time, Lynch explained, so it's better for the fishery as a whole to have a large impact on a single cohort than to have recurring negative impacts to multiple generations coming into the river to spawn. "Three years in a row is worse than hitting them really hard in one year," Lynch explained.

The plan, as Lynch outlined it, is to start drawing down the reservoirs with the dams still intact, in the middle of winter, when the river is flowing at its highest. That way, the sediment released from the reservoirs has the best chance of quickly flowing down stream and out into the ocean. Because 85 percent of that sediment is silt, Lynch said, models show most of it will flow out to sea within three or four months. Doing this during the winter, Lynch said, also means most salmon will either be up in the Klamath's tributaries or out at sea, which should minimize impacts.

The other 15 percent of sediment is made up of heavier materials, like sand, gravel and cobbles, Lynch said. Models show this material will move downstream more slowly and only when the river swells with winter rains. There's enough of this stuff that it will fill a foot-and-a-half layer in the river's channel for a couple of miles downstream of Iron Gate Dam, which sits closest to the Klamath's mouth.

"Some people think that's going to be a mess, but, well, no, it's really not," Lynch said, adding that biologists have been adding gravel downstream of dams for years anyway to mimic natural conditions and aid fish spawning.

There is some concern, however, about the massive release of fine sediment into the ocean, as some fear it will hit the mouth of the Klamath, catch a northward current and wind up deposited 15 miles north in the Crescent City Harbor. Lynch said his team didn't run specific models to vet this concern, but said it did look at "other studies of sediment plume dynamics in Northern California" and determined it's possible, with the perfect combination of currents, flows, tides and winds.

But, Lynch was quick to point out, the KHSA sets aside $65 million for the nonprofit overseeing removal to spend on mitigation, which could include a dredging of the harbor, if needed. And that underscores a point Lynch was careful to make several times: There will be adverse impacts that come along with this dam removal, possibly even some unforeseen ones. "You don't set aside $65 million for mitigation without expecting that there will be some types of things that will have to be done (after the dams come down)," Lynch said.

Physical removal of the dams will begin in spring and stretch through the summer. Lynch said it's preferable to remove dams in the drier months, when the river is flowing lower and slower, banks are more stable and it's generally easier to pull off a massive construction project in an ecologically sensitive area. And, because each of the four dams is different, each requires a different removal strategy.

Iron Gate Dam is a 189-foot, earthen embankment dam, meaning it's mostly built up of compacted earth under waterproof surface. After the reservoir is drawn down, Lynch said, crews will begin excavating the dam from the top down in June. Copco 2 (the next upriver from Iron Gate) is a 33-foot dam built of concrete, and is slated to be removed "via mechanical means" beginning in May, according to Lynch.

Copco 1 (next upriver) is a 135-foot-tall concrete dam that will be removed in 8-foot layers beginning in the winter and extending into April, with each layer being shaved off with a combination of blasting and heavy equipment. Lynch said removal work on Copco 1 can begin during the winter because there's no risk of dam failure with the removal plan, and the structure is easily accessible for work crews. The last dam, J.C. Boyle, is a 68-foot dam built of concrete and earthfill embankment. Some blasting might be necessary, Lynch said, but the majority of the structure will be removed by excavators.

Again, Lynch and others stressed, this work will come with some impacts. Removal of the dams is expected to change the river's floodplain slightly, meaning about a dozen buildings and homes along its banks may need to be moved. Additionally, there will be enough silt and debris in the water the year of removal that some systems pumping water out of the river will see their screens clogged, necessitating replacement. Around the dam reservoirs, some groundwater wells might go dry and need to be drilled deeper. And, they cautioned, some fish, and maybe even other species, will die. But forecasts of environmental disaster simply haven't come to fruition with other dam removal projects.

Tucker said the new nonprofit will be purchasing a private insurance policy to cover anything that goes wrong in excess of the set-aside mitigation funds, and he said many of the contractors tapped to remove the dams will be bonded with their own insurance policies and share liability. The success of recent dam removals elsewhere, Tucker said, has made insurance more affordable and contractors more willing to shoulder some of the liability.

Lynch said there's no doubt there will be negative impacts when all those millions of cubic yards of sediment start flowing downstream and the dams that have clogged the river for decades are finally pulled. But, he said, positive impacts will follow almost immediately.

"I think one thing a lot of people lose sight of is they think way too much in the short term," he said. "This is trying to set up the Klamath for the next decade, or the next century. That's really what fisheries and ecosystems are about. In the short-term, there are some consequences but we think we understand them and we have mitigation funding available for some of the problems in the short term.

"In the long term," Lynch continued, "there's no information out there that says this is the wrong idea."

The night before the signing ceremony at the mouth of the Klamath, O'Rourke and the Yurok Tribe hosted a salmon dinner for all the state, federal and tribal officials coming to the reservation. "All our visitors that come here to Yurok country, I'll say, eat fish. That's what we eat," explained O'Rourke. "Yurok and fish go together, hand in hand. You seldom hear of one without the other. ... If the river's sick, everything along it that depends on it is sick, including our people."

The river has been in failing health for decades. The 2002 fish kill, during which some 50,000 salmon contracted gill rot in the Klamath's warm waters and died, has been the most prominent symptom, but recent drought years have only exacerbated the problems. This year, Huffman pointed out at the signing ceremony, salmon projections are so bleak local tribes have only been allotted a harvest for the season amounting to less than one fish per tribal member.

This has a cascading effect on local tribes. At the signing ceremony, Karuk Tribal Chair Russell "Buster" Attebery said he grew up on the river, recalling that as a kid it was a great honor to be tasked with providing a meal for his family. "Being able to fish for my family was a source of pride and self esteem for me, it was an important part of my maturation as a man," he said, adding that recent generations haven't been able to play that role of provider from a young age, haven't had the opportunity for their elders to teach them the traditional way to be stewards of the river. "That loss leads to a loss of culture, a loss of personal identity, lost economic opportunities and, no doubt, plays a role in the epidemic of depression and drug abuse we see in our communities."

About a week after the ceremony, O'Rourke reflected on the morning spent under a cloudless blue sky near the mouth of the river he loves. "I think it was a historic day, without a doubt," he said. "It marks a new beginning of new relationships and strengthening old relationships to achieve something worth achieving, and that's dam removal, to restore the river to its historic state so it can begin to heal."

O'Rourke stopped short of calling it a great day. That judgment will have to wait, after all, until the sun finally sets on the four Klamath dams that choke the river on which his people depend. ●

Lone Star Cookbook

Passing down a ranch and its recipes

By Amy Barnes

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Barefoot in a cotton dress, the seventh generation of Kneeland's Lone Star Ranch greets me at the farmhouse door. Named after her great-great-grandmother, 3-year-old Ora Sizemore's family has lived and worked on this land since the mid-1800s.

The journey east to Lone Star Ranch from Eureka takes more than an hour on rough and twisty roads. Rising out of the coastal redwoods, the land softens and the air warms. Careening through vivid green fields, over cattle grids and across gravel switchbacks, I encounter no other cars. I do, however, dodge ranch dogs sleeping in the road and young calves that bound alongside the car.

"You found us!" Ora's grandmother Dina

Moore welcomes me into her kitchen. She puts on a pot of coffee and chats away like an old friend. She says the open range ranch comprises 6,000 acres and is home to 250 to 300 cows, depending on drought conditions. Dina explains they are a "cow calf operation," meaning they don't "finish" the cows up on the ranch. Instead, the calves are sold at auction. Like most ranches in Humboldt County, Lone Star is also sustained by timber harvest. A third component of the working ranch is the heavy equipment business, which comes into play during timber harvest and restoration work.

The land is carefully managed with future generations in mind and everyone in the family has a role to play. This includes the animals. "The dogs are absolutely critical," says Dina. In the field next to the house, three "guardian dogs" lounge uphill from the meat goats. It's their job to look after the goats, and the goats' job to eat the invasive Himalayan blackberry bushes.

Dina hands me a good strong cup of coffee and slides a recipe book across the counter. It is written out in the neat, looping cursive of her late mother-in-law, Edra Moore. The book begins with a letter:

Dear family, now that you are going to have your own kitchens, I thought perhaps you would like some of the old family recipes. Some are mine, some from your great grandmother and great great grandmother. They represent our kitchen history ... Food has always been important to us, not only as the end product of our labors, but as a special way of saying "I love you." — Gramma

"She was always cooking," remembers Dina's daughter Lauren Sizemore. Sizemore is nursing Ora's baby brother Ryden in an armchair near the wood stove. She is the executive director of the the Buckeye Conservancy and president of the Humboldt County Cattlewomen's Association.

"My mother-in-law was probably one of the best cooks I've ever met," Dina declares. "Her buttermilk biscuits were just a tradition. She had a library of cookbooks. Hundreds From floor to ceiling."

Dina's husband Mark Moore appears in the kitchen and quietly rummages around in the fridge. He's been out with a crew mending fences all morning. A man of few words, he says Edra's Parmesan chicken is his favorite and takes off with a cooler full of beef to trade with a neighbor.

Collaboration is integral to a sustainable ranch lifestyle. The Moores are deeply involved in Humboldt County's ranching community. They work on a local, regional and national level to protect wide-open spaces and sustain their cultural legacy through mindful land stewardship. Together with children Jake, Teal and Lauren Sizemore, the Moores have worked with and served on boards for a dizzying number of organizations, Northcoast Regional Land Trust and Humboldt County Resource Conservation District among them. Mark and Dina are also founding members of the Yager Van Duzen Environmental Stewards, working to restore ranch roads and diminish sediment in the Van Duzen watershed. In fact, Mark and Dina recently won the 2016 Excellence in Range Management Award, an international honor recognizing their innovation, civic engagement and environmental stewardship.

She makes copies of Edra's recipes and walks me outside where elderly fruit trees, evidence of homesteaders from long ago, blossom in the sun. We go to a few of her favorite spots to check out the views. Dina says she recognizes how fortunate she and Mark are that their next generation wants to be there. "We so value that," she says, looking out over the landscape. "We're grateful."

Edra's Steak and Bacon Tournedos

Serves 4.

Ingredients and method:

- 1-1 1/2 pounds flank steak
- 1 teaspoon garlic salt
- Black pepper
- 4-8 pieces of bacon
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- 1 package hollandaise sauce mix
- 1/4 teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed

Score the steak diagonally in both directions for diamond pattern on both sides. Pound the meat to flatten it a bit. Sprinkle it with garlic salt and pepper. Pre-cook the bacon until just done but not crisp. Place the bacon slices lengthwise on the steak and sprinkle it with parsley. Roll the meat up jelly-roll style, starting from the narrow end. Secure with wooden picks. Cut the roll into 1-inch slices. Place them in a baking pan and broil the sliced rolls to medium rare, 3-4 minutes per side, turning once.

Prepare the hollandaise sauce according to package directions, adding the crushed tarragon to the dry ingredients. Serve the sauce over the rolls.

Buttermilk Biscuits

Makes 14-16 biscuits.

Ingredients and method:

- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon baking soda
- 5 tablespoons shortening or butter
- 1 cup buttermilk

Heat the oven to 450 F. Sift the flour, baking powder, salt and baking soda in a bowl. Cut in the shortening or butter with a pastry blender until the mixture is crumbly. Stir in the buttermilk to moisten all the ingredients.

Knead the dough gently on a lightly floured board for about 30 seconds. Roll the dough out to 1/2-inch thickness and cut out biscuits. (A floured glass will work if you don't have a circle cutter.) Bake them on a lightly oiled cookie sheet for about 12 minutes. Serve warm.

Parmesan Chicken

Serves 4.

Ingredients and method:

- 1 fryer chicken, cut into parts
- Juice of 1 lemon
- 1 teaspoon paprika
- salt and pepper
- 1/2 cup mushrooms finely chopped
- 2 teaspoons mint leaves, minced
- 3 teaspoons butter
- 1 cup cream
- 1 tomato, peeled, seeded and chopped
- 3 egg yolks, beaten
- Parmesan cheese to taste

Rub the chicken pieces with lemon juice, paprika and salt. Place them skin-side down in a pan with oil and fry slowly over medium heat for about 20 minutes. Once the juice runs clear when pierced with a knife, arrange the pieces in an ovenproof dish.

Heat the butter in a pan and sauté the mushrooms and mint 1-2 minutes. Blend in the cream and tomato. Bring the sauce to a boil, then remove the pan from heat and beat in the egg yolks. Add salt and pepper to taste. Pour the sauce over the cooked chicken and sprinkle it with the Parmesan. Broil the chicken and sauce until golden brown. ●

The coastal pastures northwest of Arcata are home to grazing cows, colorful Victorians and narrow, bumpy roads leading to the ocean. Blending easily with the bucolic scenery, a yellow farmhouse sits surrounded by acres of greenhouses – this is the humble home of Sun Valley, America's largest cut flower farm. With an average temperature spread from 51°61° F, Arcata has one of the narrowest diurnal ranges in the country, a moderate climate that is perfect for growing tulips and other bulb flowers.

Since the Humboldt Made's creation in 2009, Sun Valley has been a partner member and vital supporter of Humboldt Made. Sun Valley's Marketing Communication Specialist, Bill Prescott, is quick to mention how Humboldt Made is important in tying the flower farm to the local community. While Sun Valley has generously mentored several Humboldt Made businesses, a key advantage to membership, Prescott explains how the relationship between Sun Valley, the community and Humboldt Made is mutually beneficial. Humboldt Made has been instrumental in connecting Sun Valley to talented local professionals, such as photographer Amy Kumler and filmmaker Malcolm DeSoto, who Sun Valley utilized for successful marketing campaigns. In Prescott's own words, he reiterates the underlying Humboldt Made mission that, "Rising tides float all boats." In short, the success of one Humboldt business is good for the economic vitality of the entire region.

With the diverse array of products grown behind the Redwood Curtain, Sun Valley Flower Farms reminds us that local flowers can sit on the dinner table every night.

The Fine Line between Angels and Devils

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

It was in no way planned, but the recent death of Merle Haggard provides an awkward, yet perhaps fitting, opportunity to shine a light on a local band influenced by his “Bakersfield sound.” A cover band they’re not, but Cliff Dallas & the Death Valley Troubadours play what I think they call “Mojave Country Twang” and that’s close enough to Bakersfield for me. Released back in ’14, the band’s album Angels & Devils provides a glimpse into lives — some fictional, other most likely not — of what can only be surmised as local gutter dwellers and bar maggots. It’s country music, but not the hoo-rah, flag-draped mindless shit that comes out of car stereos along the 99. Maybe it’s better to differentiate it as outlaw country, music and stories that are concerned with the darkness in man’s heart and soul and the rust that belies all that shines. Angels & Devils isn’t dark and pessimistic throughout, as with much that borders on the insightful, humor abounds in this work.

I’ve not heard anyone brave enough to say it — so I’ll give it a shot — but Cliff Dallas, whatever name you know him by, is one of Humboldt’s finest lyricists. At one moment you’ll hear “Black Lung” and the ghostly thoughts of a man lowered into a mine knowing death awaits, then another about a man whose perhaps only joy is the arrival of his wife’s lingerie catalogue in “Victoria’s Secret,” and “P.B.R. Girl,” which can only be about Roller Derby gals and neutered hipsters drinking this shitty beer — which hasn’t “won a ribbon since 1893” — at The Shanty. All of this couched in witty turns of phrase briefly sophisticated and often vulgar and intellectually profane, yet rooted in the blue collar life. With the Troubadours whipping and crackling behind the vocals, they’ve got just enough polish to paint the desert landscape, but not enough where it would look like a cheesy Hollywood backdrop. With their music, it’s hard to imagine why “Hippie Hatin’ Me” isn’t immediately adopted as Arcata’s municipal song. To make this case, let me quote, “I hate your white boy rasta, soy bean pasta, mattey hair, dopey stare, jerry bear, North Country Fair®, hacky sack kickin’, outta’ tune pickin’, bumper stickin’, mate lickin’, dreadlock rappin’, forest crappin’, circle drummin’, cigarette bummin’ ... Oh, hippie hatin’ me.”

If that doesn’t bring smells of the Arcata Plaza to your nose, consider yourself lucky. Who is Cliff Dallas and who are these Troubadours? It may not really matter, but through their music and lyrics, perhaps they show us all a little bit of who we are. Pimples, wrinkles, whiskey-breath and all. It’s easy to think we’re angels, but as we know, it’s a pretty fine line.

Friday

The weekend’s starting with some feel-good vibes down at the Mateel with “Polynesian reggae superstar” J Boog and his Hawaiian-based band Hot Rain. Starting off this 8 p.m. show will be DJ Westafa and then San Diegan reggae rockers Through The Roots. $40 for the triple band bill.

You can feel equally as good and get moving as well at Redwood Curtain Brewery in Arcata with a special free performance by local funksters Motherlode. They’ll start off around 8 p.m. and provide a killer soundtrack as you sip your local beer.

Just as free — but with a less talented bass player — is Money who you’ll find ripping off Pink Floyd tunes at Blue Lake Casino and Hotel at 9 p.m.

Also known for occasionally covering some Floyd tunes is Poor Man’s Whiskey which returns to Hum Brews for $15. Catch the band’s pickin’ and harmonies around 9:30 p.m.

Saturday

Rock the Redwoods II is happening at the Arcata Theatre Lounge. Local litigator/guitar slinger Zach Zwerdling tells me that this is a three-band bill benefitting the Redwood Parks Association which is celebrating the National Park’s 100th birthday. Donating their music for the evening are local park lovers Joyce Hough’s Home Cooking, The Melanie Barnett Band, and The Delta Nationals. If you love parks too Poor Man’s Whiskey plays Friday, April 15 at 9 p.m. at the Logger Bar.

— or just good music — head over to the ATL around 8 p.m. and bring $18 to donate to the cause.

Kingfoot returns to Redwood Curtain Brewery at 8 p.m. for a free show, and up in Blue Lake you’ll find the above-mentioned Cliff Dallas & the Death Valley Troubadours bringing outlaw country along with the haunting harmonies of Belles of the Levee starting around 9 p.m. at the world famous Logger Bar. This one’s free, but leave a tip for the bands.

Long time rocker/punker Chuck Prophet plays with his Mission Express and Garland Jeffreys opening the show around 9:30 p.m. $15 cover charge at Hum Brews.

Sunday

Three percussion groups from HSU perform at Fulkerson Recital Hall all starting around 8 p.m. The aptly titled Percussion Ensemble performs a work based on the Balinese Monkey Chant. Says director Eugene Novotney, “This virtuosic piece captures the deep emotion of the Monkey Chant in a dramatic percussive orchestration that pushes the seven-player ensemble to the limits of their technique and musicality.” Rounding out this percussive bill is the HSU West African Ensemble along with the World Percussion Group performing for free for HSU students, and for $8 to the rest of us.

Keepin’ the groove alive is The Deep Groove Society who will be doing their thing — as they always do — at The Jam at 9 p.m. Methinks this one’s free.

Like dancing, circles and friendship? Well, I’m glad to tell you that the Friendship Circle Dance Club combines all three! Born in 1950 to “promote health through social dance”, the FCDC has local dance band Jack Johnson and the Blue Lake Yacht Club playing jazz standards from the 30s through 50s for your dancing feet. Find em’ at the Humboldt Grange at 7 p.m. for $4.

At the same time you can hear some Tuareg-influenced music from Algeria at Richard’s Goat Tavern and Tea Room. Imarhan will be performing an acoustic set followed by an electric one. Don’t expect this to be a kitschy historical snapshot for our Western consumption, Imarhan avoids exploiting their traditional nomadic dress (suited for the Sahara Desert) and culture and simply let their “desert blues” inform us that the desert is as existing in the present as everywhere else. I hear the early show is sold out, but there are still tickets available for the later show (9:30 p.m.) for $7. Opening the show is local Gobi Blank and serving as closers are Chicago psych-rockers Crown Larks.

Tuesday

Doing his thing — don’t expect him to stop — is Humboldt’s own Buddy Reed. Check him out at Libation in Arcata around 7 p.m. Ask him how his recent gig at a SoCal blues festival went, and then throw the guy some bread as he’s playing for free.●

Full show listings in the Journal’s Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. Shit on P.B.R. and he’ll love your album.

BREAK SCIENCE

Break Science - Raised and influenced by the rhythm and culture of New York City, Adam Deitch and Borahm Lee fuse generations of the city's rich musical legacy with their own deep-rooted connection to hip-hop heritage. Merging their production styles seamlessly, the duo creates a refreshingly original take on electronic music. The live show transcends expectations with Lee's seasoned trip-hop/dub/jazz vibes on keyboards and Ableton Live and Deitch's thunderous breakbeat style on drums.

They See You Rollin'

When was the last time you laced up a pair of skates and chased your equilibrium around a rink with disco lights swirling, the beat of your favorite song and a sturdy wall helping you along? If it was back when you parted your hair down the middle, flipped the sides back and tucked a comb in your back pocket, get ready to feel cool again with Groovin' with the Giants: An AIDS/Lifecycle Fundraiser. This disco-themed, drag-queen-hosted roller skating party gets all kinds of fabulous on Saturday, April 16 from noon to 4 p.m. at the Eureka Municipal Auditorium ($8, $5, free for kids under 5).

The all ages, family fun fundraiser, organized and hosted by drag queen extraordinaire Fuscia Rae, features performances by local drag performers, a silent auction, a kiddy korner with fun activities for kids who aren't into skating (we call them artists), and tunes to grease your wheels courtesy of DJ Joe-E.

Groovin' is made possible entirely by volunteers and donations from the community, including Humboldt Pride. All proceeds go to the Redwood Giants, a local group riding in this year's AIDS/Lifecycle, an organization that rides from San Francisco to Los Angeles to raise awareness about HIV/AIDS. For more information about the team, the ride and how you can donate, visit www.aidslifecycle.org and search for "Redwood Giants."

See you at the rink!

Reel Love

The Humboldt International Film Festival, the world's oldest student-run film festival, returns to the Minor Theater (reopening for this event) April 20-23 with screenings nightly at 7 p.m. ($5 each night). Humboldt State University students invited independent filmmakers from around the world and whittled 225 submitted shorts from more than 25 countries down to 37 finalists, including Mourn, an experimental film by local filmmaker Camile Carpenter.

Audiences and judges, including Humboldt State University alums George Nelson and Michelle Cartier, and Emmy-winning director Howard L. Ritter, will see animation, experimental, documentary and narrative entries.

On Wednesday, April 20 it's Animation and Experimental movies, featuring Switch Man by Hsun-Chun Chuang, in which a city is under siege by the Evil Dr. Mantis, and a pair of movies by Xstine Cook about an orange monster named Lily.

Thursday, April 21 gets real with Documentary night. No need to wonder what Andrew Sobey's We Are Fucked: An Environmental Film is about, but A Drag Queen for Kids by Byron Karabatsos and Last Tear by Christopher H.K. Lee have us curious. Come back on Friday, April 22 for narrative shorts including Javi Navarro's I've Just Had a Dream and Total Awesome Viking Power by Morten Forland. Come on, you have to see that last one. Finally, wind it up with Best of the Fest, a playback of the winners on Saturday, April 23.

On Task

The Boss and Hardcore Henry come back swinging

By John J. Bennett
filmland@northcoastjournal.com

McCarthy possessed by Trump's other wig.

Reviews

THE BOSS. That a sailor-tongued, female-centric comedy not fronted by Amazons should win the weekend over (I'm told) yet another not so super-hero tent-pole attempt is perhaps good news enough. That said comedy should find the right balance of sweet and coarse, remaining heartwarming but consistently funny — if a little predictable—is even better.

Michelle Darnelle, played in adulthood by Melissa McCarthy (who seems more and more of a muse for writer/director Paul Feig, from Bridesmaids to the upcoming Ghostbusters) is a by-the-bootstraps protagonist. In a funny but misplaced opening montage, we see Michelle as a child, being returned every few years to a Catholic orphanage. By her teen years, she's developed a hard shell and the notion that anything she receives in the world she'll have to take. We next see her as a fiery captain of industry, conducting an over-the-top get-rich seminar for a fevered crowd. This is just one of the many lucrative deals in her storied career as the 47th richest woman in America. By her side stands long-suffering personal assistant Claire (Kristen Bell), an underpaid and over-taxed single mom. And of course, there's the omni-present Tito (Cedric Yarbrough), a ridiculous yes-man. When Michelle makes a backdoor deal that shafts her rival and former lover Renault, née Ron (Peter Dinklage), he drops the dime to the SEC. Michelle spends a few months improving her tennis game in white collar prison, but emerges to find her empire in shambles, her assets seized and herself homeless. At the urging of Claire's daughter Rachel (Ella Anderson), Michelle bunks up with the pair, soon becoming an uncomfortable fixture on their couch. But as she becomes involved with Rachel's scout troop, she sees potential for a grand new scheme and next act in her professional life. They poach most of the girls from the troop, form a new, more progressive and feminist organization, and set about getting rich slinging brownies. This leads to street dust-ups, some personal exploration and, of course, a climactic showdown with Renaud.

It's been long enough since a riches-to-rags-to-riches story worked that the contrivance feels forgivable. And the cast, particularly the leads, give warm, compelling performances that make the story feel lived-in and welcoming. Sure, McCarthy can go a little too broad with her character, but her timing is so good, her sotto voce asides so gutting, that the overplayed moments recede quickly. Dinklage, always entertaining, is especially fun here as a wannabe samurai still in love with Michelle.

The script, co-written by McCarthy, Steve Mallory and McCarthy's husband, Ben Falcone, who also directed and makes a fun cameo, holds most of its surprises in its dialogue, rather than plot. It isn't the most inventive writing, but it's a sturdy platform for comedy. R. 99M. BROADWAY FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

HARDCORE HENRY surprises less for its inventiveness (more on that momentarily) than for the fact that no one has successfully attempted this form before. This is, after all, essentially a first-person shooter video game as feature-length movie. Based on the ever-narrowing scope of cinematic narrative, I half expected all movies would be like this by 2016. That's just cynical, though, and it ignores some of Henry's not insignificant creative achievements.

Our eponymous protagonist, through whose eyes we see the world, wakes up in mysterious lab, unable to speak. He's missing an arm and a leg, which are quickly replaced with robotic parts by a beautiful scientist named Estelle (Haley Bennett). She explains that the two of them are married, just before an albino madman with telekinesis and an army of thugs storms the facility. He, Akan (Danila Kozlovsky), wants access to the cybernetic tech that Estelle pioneered, with Henry as his running, jumping, mass-killing prototype. Henry escapes the attack, but Estelle is captured, so cherchez la femme, right? As Henry discovers the capabilities of his augmented body and super-soldier mind, he is aided by Jimmy (the brilliant Sharlto Copley) who pops up in an array of identities. Manifold violences, unrestrained by physical reality, ensue.

The reason more movies haven't pulled off this model, it seems, is that it is a lot harder than it looks. Henry required meticulous planning in the stunt choreography and coordination, not to mention the camera-work. I wonder what its long-term legacy will be — whether it will spark a trend or remain a singular novelty, and whether writer/director Ilya Naishuller (making his feature debut) has any other tricks up his sleeve. Mostly I am content to enjoy Hardcore Henry as an exercise in cinematic violence, a greatly satisfying guilty pleasure. R. 96M. BROADWAY FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

Continuing

10 CLOVERFIELD LANE. This tight, paranoid, claustrophobic thriller of a monster movie is well-acted, compelling and enjoyable from first frame to last. Starring Mary Elizabeth Winstead and John Goodman. PG13. 105M. BROADWAY.

BATMAN V. SUPERMAN: DAWN OF JUSTICE. Ben Affleck is surprisingly solid as the new Batman, but neither he nor Henry Cavill's sturdy jaw can save this high-production cacophony of collapsing buildings, baffling dream sequences, congressional hearings and rushed exposition. PG-13. 151M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK, FORTUNA.

DIVERGENT: ALLEGIANT. See it through if you must, but this chapter of the YA futuristic dystopian action series lacks narrative inspiration and compelling characters. PG13. 120M. BROADWAY.

GOD'S NOT DEAD 2. A Christian teacher (Melissa Joan Hart — hey, Sabrina) beset by civil liberties baddies goes to court for talking about Jesus. PG. 121M. BROADWAY.

MIRACLES FROM HEAVEN. Jennifer Garner stars as a woman on a mission for her ill daughter, whose recovery stumps doctors. PG. 109M. BROADWAY.

MY BIG FAT GREEK WEDDING 2. Sure, there's some rote predictability but there's also silly fun about what love can be at any age. Starring Nia Vardalos. PG. 94M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

ZOOTOPIA. An animated animal take on the odd-couple buddy movie with Jason Bateman, Ginnifer Goodwin and Idris Elba. PG. 108M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (844) 477-7869 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.STOXPOSTING.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 032213-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. FOR SALES INFORMATION: (844) 477-7869 CLEAR RECON CORP. 4375 Jutland Drive Suite 200 San Diego, California 92117 4/14, 4/21, 4/28 (16-088)
